Q-Link Accessories ($99 to $199)

Let's face it, at one time or another we have all heightened the stress levels of our fathers (remember the time you broke your curfew and... well, let's not talk about that). Now you can help your dad decompress with golf-oriented accessories by Q-Link, whose "sympathetic resonance technology (SRT)" is designed to help "restore natural balance to players of all ages and abilities, facilitating the peak mental and physical performance needed to improve scoring." SRT ultimately promises "more energy, less stress, greater focus, and enhanced well-being." Q-Link stands by their product, offering your money back if your dad doesn't shave three strokes in three rounds when wearing a Q-Link item. PutterZone.com is currently sporting a Q-Link necklace pendant ($99), and it does seem to impart good vibes. At the very least, it's a stylish accessory. If your dad doesn't do necklaces, then the masculine new Q-Link bracelet (pictured here, $129 to $199) is the way to go. Even if your dad doesn't buy the jive, he might dig the look.

Q-Link has introduced a new line of Stainless Steel and Titanium performance enhancing bracelets. These new bracelets all feature dual SRT-3 wafers for maximum performance.

Okay, so what exactly is SRT-3 technology, and what does it do? Here's the official answer:

"Q-Link's technology works like a tuning fork that vibrates at a certain pitch. Thus the Q-Link's Sympathetic Resonance Technology™ (SRT™) is tuned to optimize the human energy system through resonance. As it interacts with your biofield, it leads to a rebalancing and restoration according to your individual needs."

"Q-Link products tune up your biofield through a resonant effect that harmonizes your energy and helps you to navigate smoothly through a stressful world."
